Burlington Employees Not Worried by The

About fifteen girls employed at the Burlington headquarters in Alliance are affected by the "normalcy" orders in dress sent out from Chicago through the railroad's welfare service.

The decree is: No more peek-a-boo waists. Skirts shall be a modest length. No more rolled hose, sheer hose or Business dress for business. No more rouge and very little

It doesn't bother the Alliance feminine employee contingent, however, according to local officials, because they dress in pretty good taste any way, and some of the Chicago styles have been rather slow of adoption here. Once in a while a trip east by someone on a vacation has resulted in a slight flurry upon the return of the fair one, but conservatism in dress has always been the rule among Alliance girls. Of course that part of the order putting a ban on rouge is causing some comment, for shiny noses "are just awful," as one dainty little lady expressed herself. Chicago officials of the Burlington according to the dispatches, decided the style of dress worn by their young women employes, 3,000 throughout the system, was becoming embarrassing to the working morale. They called in Miss Daisy Oden, supervisor of the woman's welfare service of the road and finally put the matter entirely in

"I thought of the advisability of asking girls to wear a uniform," said Miss Oden, "a blue serge dress and sailor hat, but this seemed too radical a departure from the present fashion, so instead I decided to encourage the girls to stop rolling their hose, roug-ing and wearing extremely short skirts. There are no printed orders. I just go to the girls and explain it to them. It isn't good taste to dress loudly at work. Girls generally have been going too far but are sensible about it when things are explained to
